AGASSE, Jacques-Laurent

Geneva 1767 – London 1849

History and animal painter as well as portraitist. He was born into a family of merchants, and developed an interest in animals at an early age, copying the plates from Buffon's Histoire naturelle in paper cut-outs in the manner of Huber. From 1782 he learned drawing in Geneva, working with Töpffer and Firmin Massot (q.v.) with whom he collaborated on two early pastels. From 1786 to 1789 he studied with David in Paris. The revolution sent him back to Geneva, where he encountered George Pitt, later Lord Rivers, who persuaded him to travel to England. He returned to Geneva, Lausanne and Paris before definitively settling in London in 1800. Later he settled in England. A signed pastel of a group of merinos was executed to illustrate the methods adopted by Charles Pictet de Rochemont (1755–1824), a diplomat and celebrated agriculturist, in his model farm at Lancy near Geneva (according to Renée Loche's expertise). Agasse made several drawings of the same subject.
