CADES, Giuseppe

Rome 4.III.1750–8.XII.1799

Cades trained under Domenico Corvi, but fell out with him and was expelled from his studio in 1766 despite having won first prize in the Concorso Clementino at the Accademia di San Luca that year. Cades's career developed unconventionally, and he was influenced by French and other foreign artists in Rome. From 1778 he worked for the Borghese family. In the early 1780s he travelled to northern Italy, and stayed briefly in Venice before returning to Rome, where he was appointed to the Accademia di San Luca in 1786.

In addition to altarpieces and history paintings, Cades became known as a prolific and accomplished draughtsman producing sheets (many in ink and wash) in the neo-classical manner. He experimented with unusual techniques such as encaustic.
