CHEVAUX, Bertrand-Léon

Bordeaux 1739 – ?Jura p.1805

Also Cheveaux; genre painter, draughtsman and illustrator, agréé 1773, reçu by the Académie de Bordeaux in 1774, where he exhibited a Repas de famille as his morceau de réception, together with a dozen pictures including one pastel. In the Étrennes bordelaises of 1776, among the list of associates of the Académie, his name is annotated as “actuellement en voyage”, and in the Tableau de MM. de l'Académie de... Bordeaux en 1780, he is listed as an external correspondent associate. In 1786 he was in Lyon, where he exhibited three paintings at the Salon. Charvet noted that he seems to have been “doux et modeste”, being willing to retouch his pictures following colleagues’ advice before and after his reception.

Sanchez provides his first name as Henri, a confusion with his father, Marc-Henri Chevaux of Bordeaux, who was married to a Marguerite-Suzanne Giac. He was evidently the “Bertrand-Léon Chevaux” described as a “peintre de l'Académie de Bordeaux” when his one-year-old son (by his second wife, Marguerite Clouin), also Bertrand-Léon, died in Nantes, 2.I.1778. His first marriage was in Bordeaux, Saint-Pierre, 10.II.1763, to Marie-Rachelle-Jeanne Pexotte or Pechotte. He was married for the third time, to Louise Laye, in Lons-le-Saunier, 11.III.1793. A daughter, Victoire-Liberté, born in Poligny in 1794, died the following year in Besançon.

On 6.XII.1792 Chevaux appeared before the Société d'Émulation du Jura and presented an allegorical picture of the triumph of Liberty and the stability of the République française (Mémoires, 1896, p. 101).

“Le citoyen Bertrand-Chevaux, peintre, de l'Académie de Bordeaux” advertised his services as a portraitist in oil and pastel and as a teacher to the citizens of Dijon: Journal de la Côte-d'Or, 25.IV.1804. He was last recorded as a “peintre de passage”, charged in 1807 with painting over the nudity the Rogier van der Weyden altarpiece at Beaune (Paul Lafond, Roger van der Weyden, 1912, p. 48); fortunately the essence he used disappeared rapidly.
