DESANGLES, Jean-Baptiste-Marie Thomas

Dijon 1749 – p.1790

Also Désangles; des Angles. Son of a dijonnais lawyer; protégé of Cochin, arriving in Paris in 1767 to enter the schools of the Académie royale under Durameau where he was recorded as “Thomas Desangles”. Further biographical details are scarce. His forenames appear in the membership lists of the masonic lodge La Céléste Amitié in Paris, 1778–79 (Le Bihan 1966). An advertisement in the Journal de Francfort, 18.X.1799, inserted by his brother, an abbé Thomas from Rietberg in Westphalia, seeking information about his whereabouts, suggests he may have been an émigré.

Two signed pastels are in frames by Henry Létonné. A small number of oil paintings are also known, of which the latest is dated 1790 (like the pastel in the Accorsi collection, it shows a man in a broad-brimmed hat, creating a lighting effect for which the artist would appear to have a penchant); another, from 1785, is in the Louvre.

It is unclear if this Desangles or a homonym is the author of the pendants from the Maurice de Rothschild collection seized during the war, but it seems likely that they are the same as those credited to Cochin in 1947 (n.g. Sicardi).
