DRAGUE, Nicolas

Jl. Berlin 1788–1830

Also Dragus; pastelist active in Berlin. According to the review of the 1788 exhibition in the Journal von und für Deutschland (1789, p. 318), Drague was born in Berlin, and was a self-taught "Mahler von vielen Talenten" who had shown himself already to be a skilful draughtsman. In 1805 "Herr Drague" (perhaps the artist or a relative) appeared in the Berlin Adres-Kalendar, as the resident "Oekonomus" at the Maison françoise, 61 Friedrichstr., a poorhouse; this suggests that his family were Huguenot refugees. In a street directory of 1808 the artist was listed as Miniatur- und Pastellmaler sowie Gemälde-Restaurateur at 12 Leipzigerstr., Berlin. He (or a homonym) appeared in Lyon advertising portraits in oil and pastel as well as drawing lessons (24.VI.1812); connections between Lyon and Berlin must have existed with the Huguenot silk-weavers operating in Köpenick from the early eighteenth century, who no doubt included the incompletely identified M. Guillemain. It is likely that the 1828 pastel of baron d'Arbaud de Jouques was executed in Dijon where the sitter resided; as this is signed "N. Drague", it cannot be by the "peintre Jean-Jacques Drague", born in Berlin on 17.IV.1780, who was a student at the École des beaux-arts in Paris, admitted 20.V.1806 under Barthélémy (he was then living at the hotel de Lyon, 40 rue Saint-Jacques). He applied for naturalisation when living in Autun, 9.V.1832 (Archives nationales, BB/11/333, dossier 1195 B8; granted by royal order, Saint-Cloud, 15.VII.1832). Jean-Jacques may well have been Nicolas's son; he is probably the "M. Drague, peintre d'Autun" who, c.1840, acquired in exchange for two of his pictures, a relict known as the épée de saint Émilien (although in fact a 17th century sabre) from the curé de Saint-Émiland; he then attempted to pass it off as the sword of Julius Sacrovir. Another source describes the "professeur de dessin au collège d'Autun, originaire de Nîmes", who ran an antiques business. There are no doubt numerous confusions between their work: only one example is known with the signature "J Drague". Jean-Jacques was probably the father or possibly brother of the dramatist Joseph Drague, a former pupil at Autun.
