fl. England 1704–25

Two of the group of five pastels of the Paman family are signed (one in full, Ph. D. Graves, the other Ph. D. Gr.) presumably by the artist known from a portrait of the Earl of Galway engraved by Simon in 1704 (possibly the unidentified oil in the Cowper collection, sold Christie's, 16.X.1953, Lot 34 n.r., as signed Ph. Dergaues) and some late 17th century oil portraits in a provincial style. He is thought to have been of Huguenot origin, although the use of a capital D suggests that the name may have been Dutch. It may be that other pastels languish under attributions to Lely etc. There are some chronological problems with the dates, costumes and ages of the sitters identified by Farrer. An Edward Amyand De Graves (1716–p.1727), son of Isaac Amyand of St James's, was an exhibitor at Charterhouse school in 1727 (Alumni carthusiana); Isaac seems to have been the son of another Isaac, and is referred to as Isaac de Graves in the will of the wine merchant Auguste Amyand (–1725); another brother, John Amyand, was probably the merchant and shop owner who appears in some law cases of the time. He may be the John de Graves or de Grave of Rouen whose escape, and separation from his children, immediately prior to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes was the subject of representations by Sir William Trumbull, the British envoy in Paris.
