HEALY, Robert

Dublin 1743–1771

Also Haly or Hayley. A pupil of West at the Dublin Society school, where on 26.X.1758 he was placed in the third class in the annual premiums for drawings by under-16-year-olds; on 8.XI.1759 he came first. He appears to have worked almost exclusively in grisaille, a medium popular in the Society school and used also by both Hamilton and Hickey. Healy's small whole-length or conversation pieces look "like fine proof prints of the most capital mezzotint engravings" (Pasquin 1796c, p. 18); his heads also show the influence of Frye with their delicate handling of light and texture. Whether these works are technically in pastel, in charcoal or in black and white chalk is difficult to determine; the Dublin exhibition catalogues have them as in chalk rather than crayon, but many later sources describe them as pastel. Those we have examined appear to use black chalk and stump together with some form of preparation or wash of grey, brown or pinkish hue, with white chalk highlights. Abrupt shadows, for example at the tips of noses, appear to be characteristic.

Healy's working career was short, lasting only from c.1765, when he was a student, to his early death supposedly caused by a cold caught while sketching in Lord Mornington's park (the Dublin chronicle for 8–10.VIII.1771 reported the death of "Robert Healy, Limner; a young gentleman of such uncommon taste and abilities in his profession, that the loss cannot be too much lamented by all the lovers of painting"). At that point his brother William (q.v.) appears to have taken over, producing copies and further works in monochrome pastel which it is very difficult to distinguish from Robert's (they are also similar to Forrest, q.v.). The nine pastels commissioned by the Conolly family for Castletown represent nearly half the artist's known oeuvre. Lady Louisa Conolly described the commission in a letter of 29.II.1768 to her sister, Lady Sarah Napier: "there is a man in the house, who draws very good likenesses in black and white chalk, we have made him draw some of the company which is good entertainment this bad day." Five payments totalling £171/11/9 were made between 6.II.1768 and 16.XI.1769.
