LINWOOD, Mary

Birmingham 1755 – Leicester 1845

Needlework artist and school mistress. She exhibited with her mother, Mrs Hannah Linwood (who in 1764 established a boarding school for girls at Belgrave Gate, Leicester which Mary took over), at the Society of Artists in 1776. (Similar work was being done in London at the time by, among others, Liotard’s copyist, Hélène Thomasset and Mary Knowles; Walpole 1937 attributes the genre to a Miss Gray, and noted Lady Caroline Conway as the “greatest mistress”.) Ten years later she was awarded a silver medal by the Society “for submitting to the inspection of the Society, as examples of works of art, and of useful and elegant employment, three pieces of needlework, representing a hare, still life, and a head of King Lear.” She made numerous copies in needlework after artists ranging from Guido Reni and Carlo Dolci to Gainsborough, Reynolds, Russell and M. W. Peters. These she exhibited for nearly some forty years in old Savile House, Leicester Square; they were sold at auction after her death. Her own portrait by Russell (1785) shows the artist with a book entitled “Da Vinci on Painting”; she was also portrayed by Beechey, by Samuel Shelley (miniature, New York, 20–21.I.1927, Lot 97 repr.) and by Hoppner around 1800. The suggestion that she herself was a pastellist was made in contemporary reports that, despite no formal instruction in drawing, “she has uncommon merit in painting, both in crayons, distemper and colours.”
