READ, Katherine

Dundee 3.II.1723 – between India and London
15.XII.1778

Katherine (Katharine or Catherine), Read (Reid, Reade etc.) was a niece of the Jacobite Sir John Wedderburn, who was executed after the '45. Of her early artistic training nothing is known. Read's family was close to the key figure of Andrew Lumisden (1720–1801), secretary to the exiled Prince Charles Edward Stuart, whose brother-in-law, Robert Strange (1721–1792), was a painter and engraver. After Culloiden, Strange travelled first to Rouen, where he studied at the académie de dessin, before moving to Paris in 1748, where he became a pupil of the engraver Le Bas. Steuart 1905 repeated a family legend that Read had painted portraits of Strange and his wife, Lumisden's sister Isabella, as early as 1745, so it would seem plausible that Strange might have been instrumental in introducing Read to French artistic circles. However a letter from Lumisden to Isabella Strange, 29.IV.1753 introducing Read to her, demonstrates that this is unlikely (for Lumisden's correspondence, National Library of Scotland, v. Seth, forthcoming).

It is unclear precisely how or when Read first arrived in Paris although several references confirm that she encountered Maurice-Quentin de La Tour at some stage before 1750. An oil self-portrait shows Read in the same pose as La Tour's celebrated autoportrait à l'index, but it seems more likely that she visited the master than that she was accepted as an élève in the conventional sense (she had had none of the preliminary training La Tour would have demanded). She nonetheless referred to "my old master La Tour" in a letter of 1751 (Steuart 1905, p. 39), mentioning that he was in London, for which there is no other evidence. In London, her letter continued,–

I don't doubt of his getting money by his great merit and great price, not from his quantity of work, unless he leaves off that custom of rubbing out which he practised but too much, although I can scarce blame it in him as a fault, as it proceeded from an over delicacy of Taste and not from a light headedness as was alleged, for he has no more of that about him than is natural to and becoming a French man.

If dated correctly, and if Read had been so informed, it seems most likely that there is a confusion with Alexis Loir, who was in London in 1751.

Claims that Read was responsible for copies of La Tour's portrait of Charles Edward in oil and in pastel c.1748 seem to be based on her being in Paris around that time and having some association with La Tour rather than on secure documentation or stylistic analysis of her production.

Following the Pretender's expulsion from France, Read followed many of the Jacobite contingent to Rome, where, according to a letter from Lumisden (3.VIII.1751) she arrived in late 1750: "Miss Read from Dundee, who was sometime at Paris with La Tour, has been here these 9 months: she has made great advances in her business: she paints in both oyl and pastille, and has done some portraits that are thought little inferior to Vandyke himself." In Rome she was befriended by the abbé Peter Grant, the Rome agent for the Scottish Catholic Mission. She started to study with Blanchet, who commenced her portrait (untraced) before being imprisoned for debt. An oil copy of a Raphael Madonna and Child, later found in her family's collection, might date to this period. Read's connections ensured that she had access to leading patrons such as cardinal Albani, who opened his collection to her. After copying four heads by Carriera (no doubt the Cleopatra J.21.1793 and three muses Albani had acquired from Rosalba in the 1740s), evidently to the cardinal's satisfaction, she progressed to making portraits of several princesses before Albani himself sat to her. Another patron was Lord Charlemont, founder of a short-lived academy for British artists in Rome. In one of her letters she writes "I have lately painted several heads in crayons merely to try experiments and occupy fancy. I have succeeded beyond my expectation, and do not despair of doing something yet before I die that may bear a comparison with Rosalba or rather La Tour, who I own is my model among all the Portrait Painters that I have yet seen." (The language would be odd if she had indeed been trained by La Tour.) In another letter, to her brother, Captain Alexander Read (6.I.1752), she explains: "I have staid one year in Rome for Improvement, I must certainly stay in it another for Name, and then you'll see I'll top it with the best of them."

In .V.1753, Read left Rome to return to England, via Florence, Venice and Paris. In Venice she finally met the now-blind Rosalba Carriera, whom the younger artist portrayed. This is confirmed by Lumisden's letter to Captain Edgar of 12.VI.1753 (Seth, forthcoming):

Miss Read by this time has left Venice where she rec'd great civilities from Mad<sup>e</sup>. Rosalba who is so celebrated for painting in pastel. This Lady, although now blind has given Miss Read several valuable instructions with regard to that sort of painting, and has made her a present of some of her curious drawings. She has allowed Miss Read to do her portrait.

Read's own letter after the visit includes in the sign-off "mes compliments à la Demoiselle qui a fait mon Portrait" which could arguably refer to a portrait by an assistant (perhaps contessa Gazola?); if by Rosalba herself, it is unlikely to have been a fully finished pastel. Written from Paris, 20.VIII.1753, she asks for correspondence to be sent to an attorney, George Crawford (– 1757), at St Mary-at-Hill. Her stay in Paris was thus brief, and she was soon back in London, where she set up a studio. She also had cardinal Albani's letter of introduction, and a present of her portrait of him, for Bubb Doddington, former ambassador and agent for Frederick, Prince of Wales. (Albani was well in with the Hanoverian side, and his support may have been of particular importance in the early rehabilitation of this member of a Jacobite family.) She quickly established herself; a portrait of Lady Stafford incited her sister Lady Dalkeith to commission further family portraits. Read's portrait of Queen Charlotte in 1761 established her popularity in England. An anonymous critic signing T.B., thought to be Thomas Bardwell

(who had Scottish connections), offered extravagant praise in his A call to the connoisseurs (repr. St James's chronicle, 9–12.V.1761):

Miss Reed has the happiest Ideas, assisted by a most beautiful Stile of Colouring, perfect Design, and exact Judgement; and it is Pity this admirable young Lady is sometimes obliged, in compliance with the Humour of her Employers, to adopt the affected Airs of Rosalba, to whom she herself is so very much superior, and which always appears, especially in this Particular, whenever she determines in the Choice of an attitude; for then she is always natural easy, and graceful; a Degree of Excellence the other never possessed.

The poet William Hayley enjoined: "Let candid justice our attention lead/To the soft crayon of the graceful Read"; thereafter, according to the abbé Grant, "All the fine ladies have made it as much the fashion to sit to Miss Read, as to take air in the park." One of those, Lady Susan Fox-Strangways, chose her sitting with the pastelists on Saturday 7.IV.1764 as the opportunity to elope with the penniless actor William O'Brien. The praise continued: anonymous verses in the Scots magazine, XXX, 1768, p. 34, "Apollo disappointed...Piqu'd at the praises of Miss Read" named her studio as in Jermyn Street, noting the presence of the Duchess of Hamilton.

Around this time she was in touch with the Society of Arts in connection with methods of fixing pastel. The Society had been approached in .VIII.1763 by Sébastien Jurine (q.v.) seeking approval for his method. Read's fixing method and samples were submitted to the committee on 26.I. and 23.III.1764, but her method was considered inferior to Jurine's. From the Society of Arts's minutes (and reported in the Public advertiser, 6.IX.1766), we know that Read endorsed Mr Stanley's crayons.

Whether through contacts made in 1753 or at the invitation of the duc de Nivernais who met her later in London where he had been ambassador 1761–62 (AN O<sup>1</sup> 1909, cited Engerand 1901, adds her address: hôtel de Châtillon, rue de Tournon), she travelled to Paris in mid-1764. A memorandum of the Bâtimens du roi (AN O<sup>1</sup> 1934<sup>B</sup>) records portraits of the comte d'Artois and of Madame Élisabeth commissioned by the Dauphin through Marigny, for 20 louis each, paid 12.X.1764. (Two anonymous portraits on the art market in 2006 probably of d'Artois and, not Madame Élisabeth, but her sister Madame Clotilde, have plausibly been identified with these.) The trip is confirmed by a notice in the Gazetteer and new daily advertiser of 31.VII.1764:

The celebrated Miss Read, who is now in France for the benefit of her health, was, last week, made Painter in Crayons to her Majesty.

The following year the same journal reported (5.II.1765) that "their Royal Highnesses the Princess Louise and Princess Caroline are sitting to the celebrated Miss Read for their portraits in Crayons."

Read worked mainly in pastel, but also in oil and probably miniature. A good many (roughly one-third) of the surviving pastels show sitters' hands, although this feature was one where her draughtsmanship was distinctively deficient. There is no evidence of La Tour, or even French pastel technique (except perhaps that her faces are often suffused in a bluish glow), in her known œuvre, almost all of which dates to after her return to London. One exception, the portrait of Lord Bruce, shows an elongated elegance reminiscent of Blanchet. The medium of the recorded Roman portraits is seldom clear, although the whole length Marchesa Massimo or the canvas with portraits of Lord Fortrose and Dr Mackenzie must have been in oil, while a second portrait of Dr Mackenzie discovered here in 2022 is in pastel. Read's sitters are often shown with child-like features, making dating from age alone hazardous.

Read exhibited at the Free Society between 1761 and 1768 and at the Society of Artists 1760–72 (becoming an honorary member in 1769, along with pastellists Mary Benwell and Mary Black, a response to the Royal Academy's appointment of Angelica Kauffman and Mary Moser). When the Society was threatened by the foundation of the Royal Academy, Read was alone among the members in opposing a rather weak petition to the king in protest at the encroachment; she recognised that more explicit demands were required, but her views were ignored. Along with Pierre-Étienne Falconet, she defected to the Royal Academy a few years later, and was immediately expelled from the Society. Only a handful of her works appeared at the Royal Academy exhibitions, between 1773 to 1776. Her addresses were St James's Place (1763–66); Jermyn Street (1766–71) and 27 Welbeck Street (1771–76). Elizabeth Carter, writing to Mrs Montagu of the Society of Artists exhibition of 1761, said: "The portrait by which I was most struck is a child, by Miss Read, so much alive as to make the rest appear mere pictures." James Beattie (London diary, 1773, p. 51) thought that "Miss Read is a delicate painter; but no very strong expression" (while her niece's work "promise[s] an extraordinary genius"). By 1772 Read was charging £20 for single figures; three years later her prices were 30 guineas for single figures and 150 guineas for a full length in oils. Immediately after her death, her portrait of Mrs Garrick was valued at £10 in David Garrick's posthumous inventory, several times the level of the Liotard pastels in his collection.

An examination of Andrew Lumisden's manuscript correspondence from Rome to Robert Strange in Naples (1762; National Library of Scotland, Acc.8774, cited Seth, forthcoming) reveals that Read continued to source materials from Rome as late as 1762 when they would readily have been available in London or Paris, perhaps to keep in with her Jacobite friends. James Byres (who had been trained by Mengs) provided blues (Prussian and indigo, ground and mixed with gum). James Nevay (another Mengs pupil) executed a commission about "Miss Reads pencils" which (despite the term, which normally signified brushes) were "newly put up in a small box" to be delivered by Edmond Rolfe, then returning to England, who "promised to take particular care of them" (implying that Lumisden referred to pastels).

Read employed a number of framers who have been identified, including Thomas Fentham, 52 Strand, London; Robert Tull, of St James's and Broad Street, and Thomas Vials, of Great Newport Street and Leicester Square. A letter of 16.VIII.1771 (Laing MS 2, 511, University of Edinburgh, cited Kenny 2013, p. 153) from the Duke of Argyll to his agent John Davidson in Edinburgh mentions that one of her pastels "is to be sent to Hamilton [Palace] with great care. As it is painted in crayons it may be easily hurt and must therefore be carried on a man's back." It was no doubt the pastel about which the artist had written from London to the Duchess of Argyll, 2.VII.1771 (Duke of Argyll, Intimate society letters, London, 1910, I, p. 138) reporting that she had shipped the "Crayon Picture" [unspecified] to Davidson, mentioning also the Ship Master and Frame Maker's Receipts; "as I am about the other Picture for your Grace, which will be finished in about a fortnight" she sought instructions for its delivery, adding of her own whereabouts: "I am going no further off than Marybone Church."

In addition to her own portraits, Read copied those of other artists, including perhaps Sir Joshua Reynolds; Mannings's catalogue of Reynolds includes only an entry from Lady Shelburne's diary (8.IX.1766) requesting that Sir Joshua send her husband's portrait to "Miss Read" to be copied for her; but there is no doubt that Read's own distinctive poses, with bodies leaning forwards and heads either thrown back or inclined still further, owe much to the innovation of Reynolds. It is possible that the pose of her double portrait of the Yorke children derives from that of the Lion portrait of the Carpenter girls shown at the 1771 Society of Artists.

Fanny Burney records visiting Read's studio (20.II.1774; a second visit took place on 28.II.1775, directly after going to Sir Joshua's), but she did not take to Miss Read whom she described as "deaf... most exceedingly ugly and of a very melancholy, or rather discontented humour"; this she said was attributed to her following inconsistent advice in regard to her worldly affairs. (Her father Charles Burney gives a similar account of the "Rosalba of Britain", the "grace and softness of colouring" of whose crayons contrasted with the awkward, ill-dressed and plain artist's saturnine and cold personality.) Fanny Burney was more impressed by Read's niece, the precocious artist Helena Beatson (q.v.), who had "a most astonishing genius for drawing, though never taught... a very wonderful girl". On the second visit, Burney—then went to Miss Reid, to see her paintings, which in crayons seem to nearly reach perfection; their not standing appears to me the only inferiority they have to oil colours; while they are new nothing can be so soft, so delicate, so blooming. We went afterwards into the room, where Miss Reid and her lively niece were sitting. ... She is a very clever woman, & in her Profession has certainly very great merit, but her turn of mind is naturally melancholy, she is Absent, full of Care, & has a Countenance the most haggard & wretched I ever saw, added to which she Dresses in a style most strange & Queer that can be conceived, & Which is worst of all, is always very Dirty.

Read decided to travel to India with her niece in 1775. (Her brother William was a surgeon in the East India Company's service.) Her reasons for the trip may have included a decline in popularity: only a few years later, the critic in the London courier (1.V.1782), praising the work of Margaret King (q.v.) and comparing her to Cotes, added "Stand aside, Miss Read." It was originally intended that she travel with Lord Pigot, the newly appointed governor of Madras, who sailed in 1775, a date widely reported as that of Read's departure; but in fact she sailed later, in .II.1777. Although she initially attracted the Nabob's attention and was "vastly liked by everybody" (according to a contemporary letter), she "has not the least inclination for show", which was not the path to success. Her niece rapidly married and is said to have neglected her. Read's health deteriorated, and she decided to return to England rather than travelling on to Calcutta. Having made her will, she set off with her brother from Negatapam in .X.1778 and died on the voyage two months later. No works are known from her Indian period, apart from an oil painting of an "East Indian Princess" included in the sale of her great-great-niece, Jane Cox, in 1954. Read's will was made in Fort St George, 29.VI.1778 and given probate in London, 26.X.1779.

Her fame during her life was considerable. An anonymous correspondent (PQR 1785, p. 141) in a piece on women artists in the Artist's repository and drawing magazine, mentions her: "Miss READ's pictures should be remembered with applause, especially those painted in crayons." Smollett said that "Miss Reid excelled the celebrated Rosalba in portrait-painting, both in miniature and at large, in oil as well as in crayons" (History of England, 1791, V, p. 381), but she was forgotten until Steuart's 1905 article, and forgotten again until more recent researches into both women artists and British artists in Rome found her a particular subject of interest.

Salon critiques

Anon., "An historical and critical review of the paintings, &c. now exhibiting at the Great Room of the Society for the Encouragement of the Arts", from the Universal Museum, repr. The Beauties of all the Magazines selected, 1762, pp. 185–87:

52. A portrait in crayons of a young gentleman with a dog, by Miss Reed. The dog's head is admirable, and the innocence expressed in the child's face very natural and beautiful.

Anon. review of Free Society exhibition, "To the printer of the..." St James's chronicle, 11.V.1765:

Miss READ, St James's Place.
The Crayons of this Lady, the present English Rosalba, do Honour to her Country. Her Picture of the two young Princes has uncommon Merit both in the Execution and Composition. That of the young Lady playing with a Kitten has also great Delicacy, and would be no improper Companion to that excellent Portrait by Mr Cotes, at the other Exhibition, of a young Gentleman playing with a Greyhound.

[Jacques-Georges Deyverdun], Mémoires littéraires de la Grande Bretagne pour l'an 1768, London, 1769, article VIII, "Beaux arts, &c.", p. 243:

Il n'y avoit pas beaucoup de Portraits remarquables dans cette Exposition [au Salon de Pall-Mall]. Nous y avons distingué un Tableau de quatre enfants en pastel, par Mlle READ. Il y en a un très-petit, dont les trois autres sont fort occupés, & l'ensemble est vif & naturel. Une Dame debout dans son cabinet, appuyée contre un écran, un enfant joue avec un petit chien, on voit sur un tabouret un château de cartes commencé, tout cela est fort bien exécuté, mais il y a des défauts de proportion.

Anon., "Critical observations on the pictures which are now exhibiting at the great room, Spring-garden, Charing-cross, by the Society of Arts of G. Britain, 1768", The Scots magazine, XXX, v.1768, p. 251:

Two children, in crayons; by Miss Read. – We have seen much better crayon-paintings by this ingenious lady.

[Robert BAKER], Observations on the Pictures now in exhibition at the Royal Academy, Spring Gardens and Mr Christie's, London, 1771:

[p. 6] After Cotes, our best painter in crayons, (and perhaps our only good one) is Miss Read. She likewise paints very well in oil. Her Pencilling is free and easy, and her colouring has a great deal of truth. There is a Nativeness in her children, as well as in Cotes's, but less of it; and herein she seems to be his imitator.

[p. 284] 134, 135. The two portraits by Miss Read, whom I look upon as our best painter in crayons, now Cotes is dead, are, perhaps, superior to any other pictures in crayons in these exhibitions; but they are inferior to some of her former productions.

Anon., Letters concerning the present state of England: particularly respecting the politics, arts, manners, and literature of the times, London, 1772, p. 257:

This lady's crayons are filled with grace and elegance; her expression of mildness; youthful cheerfulness; smiles and natural ease; is uncommonly beautiful; and renders her works truly pleasing. Her attitudes have great merit; and the general effect of all her pieces agreeable.

Anon. "Observations of the pictures now exhibiting at the Royal Academy Pall-Mall", Middlesex journal, 5.v.1773:

No. 229. Three children, in crayons. By Miss Read
Though Miss Read may justly be reckoned one of our best painters in crayons since the death of Mr Cotes, these portraits are much defective in mellowness of colouring.
