SAINT-MÉMIN, Charles-Balthazar-Julien Févret de

Dijon 12.II.1770–23.VI.1852

The son of a conseiller au parlement de Dijon, Saint-Mémin graduated from the École militaire in Paris in 1785. He fought with royalist forces during the Revolution. After periods in Switzerland and Germany, he travelled to New York in 1793 but had to abandon plans to continue on to his mother's estate in San Domingo on account of the insurrection there. He travelled to Baltimore, Philadelphia, Washington, Norfolk, Richmond and Charleston before returning to France in 1814; he settled in Dijon and became directeur du musée in 1817.

Saint-Mémin worked initially as an engraver, but switched from around 1796 to making profile portraits using the physionotrace. The many works catalogued as "pastels" seem in fact to have been drawings in black chalk with stumping, graphite and highlights of white chalk; he used buff paper prepared with a pink wash. The original drawings were in special frames using black/gold decorated glass. The drawings were then transferred with a pantograph to a copper plate from which 12 or more engravings were made. The standard fee was $35 for women and $25 for men. These numerous works are mostly too late to be included here (760 engravings were published by Elias Dexter in 1862, and some 73 crayons are listed in Bolton 1923). Saint-Mémin was assisted by Louis Lemet and Thomas Bluget de Valdenuit, while Boudier produced very similar work.
