TEMPESTI, Domenico Marchi

Rovezzano, near Florence c.1655 – Florence
21.III.1737

Domenico Marchi, known as Tempesti (or Tempesta, Tempestino), was a history, landscape and portrait painter. He became the protégé of Cosimo III de' Medici, who initially provided him with the funds to study with Volterrano (q.v.), and then sent him to Paris in 1676 to learn engraving and pastel from Nanteuil (q.v.). Over the next two years Nanteuil happily imparted many of his secrets to the pupil, who left an account of his master's methods. Tempesti also made a number of copies of his portraits of the French court, several of which are now in the Uffizi but have caused considerable confusions of attribution (the "beliss.mo" portrait of Cardinal Bonzi, the Tuscan representative in Paris, is referred to in a contemporary letter, while d'Aligre and the Louis XIV copy are apparently by the same hand). Following Nanteuil's death, Cosimo III acquired a number of Nanteuil's pastels to serve as models for Tempesti, who went on to produce "bellissimi ritratti al naturale e col pastelli" of members of the court from his studio in the granduca's palace. A number of these have been lost, but four remaining from a group of eight in the collection of granduchessa Vittoria at the villa del Poggio Imperiale were identified in 1991. Nanteuil was not the only artist whose works Tempesti copied (e.g. the portraits of Fernando II and Vivarini derive from Sustermans), a fact which impedes the identification of his œuvre. Tempesti's residence in Florence was interrupted from the end of 1689 by a long stay in Rome where he worked with Carlo Maratti. Later, according to Gabburri, the first biographer of the artist, Tempesti travelled widely among the courts of Europe, including London, with Lord Exeter, as well as Ireland, Holland, Düsseldorf (where he made portraits of the Electors, which were well paid; Giorgio Maria Rapparini reported to Rosalba Carriera, in a letter from Düsseldorf of 24.IV.1712, that a "peintre florentin" had arrived at court from England, and that he "fait des portraits au pastel"), Flanders and Paris, before definitively returning to Florence in 1715. He had first been elected to the Accademia there on 9.V.1683, and became console in 1719. Among his pupils was Giovanna Fratellini (q.v.); their pastels were exhibited at SS Annunziata in Florence on St Luke's day each year.
