FRAGONARD, Jean-Honoré

Grasse 5.IV.1732 – Paris 22.VIII.1806

Fragonard's family moved to Paris around 1738. He was apprenticed first to Chardin, then to Boucher between 1748 and 1752, winning the grand prix de l'Académie that year, and becoming one of its élèves protégés. He was in Rome between 1756 and 1761, visiting Naples and Sicily. Returning to Paris with the abbé de Saint-Non, they travelled through Florence and Venice. Fragonard was agrégé in 1765 as a history painter with Coréus et Callirhoé. In 1769, Fragonard married his pupil, the miniaturist Marie-Anne Gérard (q.v.). A second journey to Italy, made with Bergeret in 1773–74, encompassed Toulouse, Marseille, Genoa, Florence, Rome, Naples, Venice, Vienna, Prague, Dresden, Frankfurt, Darmstadt and Strasbourg. His sister-in-law Marguerite Gérard arrived in Paris around 1775, and began a fruitful collaboration. After the Revolution Fragonard's popularity declined (although he was appointed conservateur du Museum central des arts), but he is now recognised as one of the most important painters of his generation.

The extraordinary brilliance of the portrait of his maid Sophie (Besançon) makes it regrettable that Fragonard seems rarely to have worked in pastel. Cuzin writes that the Enfant en Amour "enchante par la gaité des indications virevoltantes qui suggèrent les formes, dans une lumière qui évoque les miniatures": the result may not appeal to every taste, but it is indisputably Fragonard at his most original and virtuosic.

As to his influences, a chalk drawing made by him after Rosalba is recorded in a contemporary sale (Paris, 15–22.XI.1779, Lot 267): Dupuy-Vachey 2017 identified the vendor as Pierre Adolf Hall, while Dupuy-Vachey 2019, fig. 4, reproduces the counterproof of this drawing, a copy of Consul Smith's L'Imverno. As with his miniatures, some of the works attributed to him may be by his wife. Numerous copies of his other work are found in pastel, by Bréhan, Saint-Non (qq.v.) and others.

The bulk of the records of Fragonard "pastels", where they are not simply overambitious descriptions of copies of his paintings or pastiches, turn out to be drawings with touches of pastel or crayons de couleur.

Dupuy-Vachey 2019, followed later by Marty de Cambiaire 2020, published a suite of fourteen grisaille drawings made c.1770 for Desormeaux's Histoire de la Maison de Bourbon, five of which relate to engravings after Fragonard in volumes appearing in 1776 and 1782. Described as in pastel (a term Dupuy-Vachey uses also for trois crayons drawings and any drawing "sous verre" in contemporary auction records), recent research (reported in Salmon 2021) confirms that the material used is pure carbon black and chalk rather than a reconstituted pierre noire or other artificial crayon. No fixative is present, resulting in noticeable offset in the album where they were originally bound, from which sheets were (for unknown reasons) removed at different stages. To Dupuy-Vachey's provenance we add (here in 2019) the 1808 sale of the album by the genealogical publisher Pierre-Michel

Lamy. (Whether Lamy acquired any of these from the Anisson-Duperron sale in 1795 is unclear: he cannot have acquired all of them there, and his connections with Desormeaux, the fact that Ribou lived in the same building etc. suggest he may well have acquired the series from the draughtsmen directly.) The drawings themselves are quite unlike the rest of Fragonard's œuvre (and share an anatomical peculiarity in the depiction of the mouth, perhaps intended by the artist to represent a genetic trait), while the single surviving oil version of one of the portraits (François, comte d'Enghien, in Grasse) fits more comfortably. In this case however the print seems to follow the oil more closely than the drawing, excluding the possibility that the series of grisailles were intermediate works by a different hand. Although one of the engravings was made in 1774, a watermark on one of the drawings dates it to 1776, and this seems a better date for most of the 14 sheets than the c.1768–70 date proposed by Dupuy-Vachey.

They were purchased in .II.2020 by the Louvre, as "attributed to" Fragonard (together with four later drawings attributed to Anicet-Charles-Gabriel Lemonnier, q.v.) reflecting a lack of unanimity among Fragonard specialists. High resolution images (made available 27.VII.2020) have answered some of the questions summarised in Jeffares 2020c (as originally issued, 16.VII.2020): the four Lemonnier sheets are by a different hand; the 14 sheets below demonstrate a very wide range of achievement, both among those engraved and those not (several – e.g. saint Louis; Blanche – are so feeble and so unlike the known œuvre that it is difficult to accept them); all appear nevertheless to be by one hand; some (e.g. Beaujeu; Bayard) of them demonstrate a bold and free handling of which no one but Fragonard could be suspected; and if the technique itself has no direct parallels in Fragonard's work, they are sufficiently close to what he might be expected to have done that the letters on the engravings should be trusted. A different view is taken by Jean-Pierre Cuzin (2020), who argues that five of the drawings (those specifically linked to engravings after Fragonard) are non-autograph copies after Fragonard, and the remaining drawings Dupuy-Vachey attributed to him are by François-André Vincent. However the medium is at least as unexpected in Vincent as it is in Fragonard, and an argument that depends on Vincent's style as it most closely approaches Fragonard's (and appears only in oils and wash drawings by Vincent) is unlikely to convince sceptics.
